PHOTOSHOP LEARN MORE... Using Photoshop As its name implies, Photoshop is a tool that lets you manipulate the pixels that make up your image. That's what enables you to edit the visible information of an image. You use Photoshop to get the information that's in your image and eliminate or add to it. You also color-correct, add or subtract highlights, sharpen, blur, reduce or enhance contrast, and crop the image or overlay color blocks. What's available in Photoshop's tools for editing depends on the file format. The default format for most images is the RGB format, whereas for a vector format such as EPS, you use the CMYK (Cyan, Magenta, Yellow, and Black) color model. Photoshop's most powerful features are found in the Tools panel, which appears only when you've selected an image to work on. Using Select Before you do anything in Photoshop, you need to select a tool from the Tools panel, as shown in Figure 4-8. This is the main workspace of the image. From this workspace, you can display the tools that you need for your task. Most often, you work from the Layers panel, where you set properties for each layer. To do so, you select a tool and drag it onto the Layers panel. You can access the Layers panel by clicking the Layers icon in the bottom-right corner of the Photoshop window, or by choosing Window⇒Layers. Figure 4-8: Use a tool to work on your image, and select the tools you need from the toolbar. When you select the tool, you see the tool's options appear at the bottom of the screen, as shown in Figure 4-8. Figure 4-9 shows the Brush tool available in the Tools panel. Figure 4-9: Using the Brush, you can paint colors and strokes. When you select a tool, you see it appear in the lower-right corner of the screen in the Tool Options dialog box (as shown in Figure 4-9). This dialog box is very useful because if you're undecided about how to use the tool, you can quickly select one of the choices from the list box. The dialog box also displays the keyboard shortcuts for each of the tools. By default, the Rectangle Select tool selects only the pixels in the corner, but you

The story comes at the same time that the Justice Department is rounding up a still-unidentified suspect in connection with a string of political violence, a recent bomb threat in Minnesota, and an old New York City hate crime in which the men responsible for the swastikas last summer were also charged in connection with a plot to bomb Jewish students at the University of Florida. Image A protest outside of the Lafayette County Courthouse in Opelika, Ala., on Thursday. Credit... Mark Wallheiser/Getty Images On Thursday, four protesters were shot and wounded when two police officers in Lafayette County, Ala., opened fire on them, Sheriff David Bisbee said. One victim, a woman in her 50s, was in critical condition, another was in fair condition and a third suffered nonlife-threatening injuries, Sheriff Bisbee said. The officers who shot them were involved in a struggle with the protesters before opening fire, he said. "It doesn't seem to me that there would be reason for them to fire on these individuals," Sheriff Bisbee said. The shooting occurred after the demonstrators, who appeared to be carrying Confederate battle flags, had initially been escorted from the county courthouse by Sheriff's Department deputies. The protesters were later released, though Sheriff Bisbee said that some of them who were threatening others with the Confederate flags were kept separate. The White House said on Thursday that it was deeply disturbed by the shooting, especially in light of the recent string of political violence. The White House, however, offered no public words of condemnation of the protesters or the Confederate flag. Rep. Bennie Thompson, D-Miss., the ranking Democrat on the House Committee on Homeland Security, said on the House floor on Thursday that "We must continue to condemn the Confederate flag and any other hate symbol," but he said that the demonstrations and shootings in Alabama were not something the committee should focus on. He added, "We have to do a better job keeping America safe, not condemn the people who are seeking to do the same." The protests were held outside the courthouse after Chief Assistant District Attorney Johnny Cash made a brief court appearance in a case involving the white supremacist blogger Andrew "Weev" Auernheimer, who faced possible criminal charges related to identity fraud and bank fraud. In July, Auernheimer, 24, was sentenced to one year in jail on contempt of court charges.Q:
