Multiplex four-band EQ and compressor & LFO - transform and saturate! Multiplex® is a low-priced four-band audio equalizer and compressor and with the integrated low frequency (LFO) modulation function, Multiplex can be used in stereo or mono operation for one channel, and also allows to operate with three or four inputs. Multiplex is widely used in recording studios to achieve a warmer, grunge and dirty sound. Pryme brings your sound to life through its famous reverb plug-in with its industry standard 30 presets. The original Black Ice reverb pedal, which it inherited from limelight plug-ins and famously stole in the early years of its existence, is now back and ready for action. So if the original Black Ice isn't what you are looking for, and you'd rather go for something more modern, something that can deliver the same vintage sound and is equally soft and subtly rich but with a more active type of reverb, then Black Ice is what you are looking for. As the name suggests, the Black Ice reverb offers 30 different presets to choose from, which is nice if you like to be able to try out various effects (and hopefully achieve a sound that you like). And the good news is that Pryme reverb also works well with MP3s, even though the settings and settings are not exactly the same, but they are pretty much similar. It also works well with most other soft compressors such as Freeverb, Dynamic, which is maybe a small drawback. What makes the Black Ice reverb unique is its use of full width/height bipanning and the use of a full scale slope/amplitude-dependent decay, giving the effect the classic warmth and natural ambience and lushness that are expected from the likes of the SSL room reverb. But of course, that comes at the cost of a bit of memory and CPU usage and the Black Ice also has a slightly more artificial, processed sound. The Black Ice Reverb is not very expensive – around USD 99. You can also get a 2-band compressor/limiter for USD 45.
