TPB 2011The King Wants to Live" and "Mama, I'm Through With Him", in which Zellweger delivered a jaundiced, bitter performance as the adult Lorraine. Palazzo contends that by taking over these scenes from the stage production and the screenplay he "expanded upon their context and tonal range in a convincing manner." The shifting of scenes from the first act of the musical to Zellweger's performance in the second act of the film was also praised. Wishing to avoid anything that could be considered a "cheap product", Miramax cut several scenes from the film and allowed Zellweger to improvise some dialogue. The soundtrack was released on November 8, 2005, and featured alternative metal band The Sword as the primary musicians, while composer Stephen Trask returned to his original score. Two versions of the film score were released on August 14, 2007. "Loose Ends" is the original score as composed and performed by Stephen Trask, while the new score performed by the band The Sword is titled "A New Creation". The extended version of "Loose Ends" was released on August 28, 2007. The album also features guest performances by

Nick Cave and Warren Ellis. "A New Creation" was released on September 24, 2007. Soundtrack listing Release Slated for a November 3, 2005 theatrical release in the United States, The Lovely Bones was originally expected to go into wide release the same week as Catch Me If You Can (December 5, 2005), another Miramax release starring Tom Hanks. However, that release date was shifted in late October
