The Weapon Design is based on the Prototype of the Sword Sphere:

The sword, weapon, and the sword sphere are composed of the same elements. Sword Sphere is made up of four transparent layers. Each had different weights and strengths. The weak parts of the sword (armors, center section, front part of tip) all share in the strength of the sword sphere, reducing the weight and reducing the effect of the center part of the tip of the sword. The entire blade weighs less than the tip, causing it to have a lively feeling. By drawing the sword, making a powerful swing with it is possible, and each attack is more effective.

The reason why we have the sword sphere that concentrates the strength of all the parts is because of musculus effect, so that the power of each swing can be distributed to the entire blade. Also, with the power of each swing, the tip that I mentioned has greater strength than those were not coated, and with the strength of the tip, the energy generated can be increased.

The sword sphere is the main Spheres used in the Guardian Sword, the Guardian Sword Sphere, and the Phoenix Sword. If you study the evolution of the weapon, they share their soul.

They all have a soul of getting energy, increase their strength, and performs a powerful attack. But also have a soul of healing their body. If this soul is cut off with the blade, you will likely lose strength, and abilities like blocking and deflecting attacks will be reduced.

But the sword sphere directly contains a part that recovers the strength of each swing and heals the wound. Of course, because of the power of a sword, which requires low frequency, it's not possible to immediately recover the damage done in

-Extremely Fun Action RPG. Think of it as a BREEAMism card for the smartphone! It's always good to see action role-playing games get a manga adaptation. And while the fantasy RPG finally saw a release in Japan, the North American market has been waiting for the perfect time to receive the action role-playing game. I think I can safely say we are finally getting it. This is one of the best RPG's I've played since I was a boy. The world, graphics, sound and gameplay make you feel like you are living the fantasy. My only hope is that more developers of the genre keep making beautiful rpg's like this. The game is for the more mature gaming audience, but I found myself playing it because I would just walk around for a while and then be like O hai a chap... 'I wonder who I'm supposed to see first here...'. Once you get into the game a little, you'll find that there are other ways of getting around other than your main character. You don't have to move around the area by foot, you can get there by airship, by magic carpets or by carriage. I really enjoy this aspect of the game, as most action RPGs limit your movements to on foot only. Story wise, while there is a bit of a confusing plot, with all the twists and turns you can imagine, it keeps you wanting more. The characters are interesting and likeable, with their own personalities. The main character, Linda, has a nice charm and she isn't boring like some main characters in the genre. The three main characters you'll meet along the way. They're almost like the three parts of a human being, or maybe even like the three main characters of a heart-warming story. The plot twists and turns at a decent pace, and the story never relies on making things too complicated. And you will be amazed by the discovery of the Elden Ring which will bring out all sorts of unexpected situations and results. This is the type of game where you won't quite know what's going to happen, and you'll be playing it as it's happening to you. Lots of twists and turns! The only downside to this game is the amounts of repetitive gameplay and some of the missions are a tad too easy. I've only managed to kill four-and-a-half dragons in one go. But I will forgive it, as it's the developers' way of telling you: 'Hey, you bff6bb2d33
