You can choose from three types of equipment for your ship, and enjoy different strategies for each. INVINCIBLE TIME: Falling in the game cannot kill you. If you make a mistake, just hit the space key and wait until the invincible time expires, and you can resurrect. RESURRECTING EVERY TIME Resurrects at the start of the stage you died in. SHOP Your shop will provide you with either complementary equipment (when you complete a level, you will receive additional equipments and EXP) or items to purchase. If you wish to purchase, you can add your friends list, chat with them, and exchange equipments and items. MULTIPLAYER Three players can play at the same time. [System requirements] OS Windows XP SP3/7/8/10/x64 CPU 2GHz or more RAM 256MB or more Video Memory 512MB or moreQ: Why does the compiler reject this contrived iterator cast? Consider the following code: #include #include struct Foo { Foo() = default; Foo( Foo const& ) = delete; Foo( Foo&& ) = delete; Foo& operator=( Foo const& ) = delete; Foo& operator=( Foo&& ) = delete; }; int main() { std::shared_ptr p{std::make_shared()}; std::shared_ptr q{std::static_pointer_cast(p)}; assert( q.get() != p.get() ); } My compiler, gcc-6.2.1, says error: no matching function for call to 'Foo::Foo(std::shared_ptr&)' std::shared_ptr q{std::static_pointer_cast(p)};

It's winter in the suburbs, and your dutiful son sends you a letter. But the contents of the letter are so threatening that you don't dare read it. "Mom, I know that you are listening to strange voices on the radio every day. If you've gone mad, please kill yourself. I really can't take it any more." "Who is he talking about?" Your face turns pale when you realize the threat is directed at you. That's when you read the letter. What's going on? "From: Son Dear Dad Hey Dad, I know you are listening to strange voices on the radio every day. If you've gone mad, please kill yourself. I really can't take it any more. Love, Son" Your young son, who is currently attending school, is a bright young man, who is passionate about fixing electronics. He's interested in the way that electronic equipment works, and he's really into computers. He seems quite content with his life, but something has been on his mind for some time. You worry. Your son is growing up, but he's still so young. He's still young enough to be a target for danger. You find out that your son was involved in a car accident. The car in which he was a passenger came off the road and crashed into a tree. He was transferred to an intensive care unit for treatment. You find yourself unable to visit his bedside, and you're desperate to hear his voice. You rush to his hospital room. A man, wearing a cap, is standing in front of your son's hospital bed. "I knew he would save my life someday." The man speaks. You suddenly realize that he knows about your son. Who is this man? You get in front of your son's hospital bed and ask. "Dear Dad, I got a call from the girl in the car I was in. I didn't do anything wrong, and I don't deserve to die. She said that you killed me. I'm okay now. You have to live on without me." You can't stop crying. A shadow

What's new:

: Pastor David Young and his parishioners didn't need a reason to start a campaign against the proposed "Ark Park" at Martin Plantation in New London. "I got a call from a member of the county planning board," Young told the Phoenix for this newspaper story. "He said someone was trying to start a circus or a recreational center in a park." Pica Martins, the waterfront owner, had been told of the campaign, but hadn't been so easily deterred. Martins told the lawyer from Historic New London and the Nature Conservancy named Tom Storkey, "If I give you a park, I have to keep it safe. If that means you can get there by boat, then the boats have to come by my marina, and I'm no idiot." That mark of sanity had either never occurred to the environmentalists or were too terrified to utter it. In any case, Martins' marina has long let owned-and-operated boats dock on the riverfront, and he makes sure that no one is ever forced off onto its dock spaces. His marina allows pontoon boats to pass through, but it requires that the boats carry a certificate of inspection, which only allows boats to go through when no one is aboard the vessel. Those actions made Martins a rebel enforcer of the law; when he is arrested for enforcing the law, he is told he is "the only free man in America that actually puts up with the politicians." "And they're right," he says. "To let the politicians run the state is like letting the fox guard the hen house." Fortunately for Martins, state legislators made good friends with New London Mayor Edward Violanti. "He's a real smart and fabulous guy," Martins said. "Violanti, he listened to me and got off my back." Allowed to continue, Martins let more and more boats dock at his marina. In fact, Martins would like to add more than 250 slips, a facility that would make him the biggest slip operator on the Thames River. In return, the municipality would have a little bit of waterfront in return. That's 70-plus slips for Martins, 250 for the town, plus a little bit for a mostly empty icehouse belonging to Violanti. It's a
